

CSA standards help reduce work-related injuries and fatalities.

It's all about life.

A need to reduce workplace deaths

In 2005, 1097 Canadian workers died on the job. In September 2006, CSA officially launched the Z1000 Occupational Health and Safety Management System standard, with a specific goal of helping to reduce the number of workplace injuries and deaths in Canada.

